What is Aging-In-Place?

Aging-In-Place is a term used to describe a person living in the residence of their choice for as long as they are able as they age.

Why is Aging-In-Place Important?

Currently, the majority of senior persons aged 65 and older are living either with a spouse or alone in their own home. As we age, we struggle with everyday tasks, our health care and the lives we lead in our homes. For many, our quality of life goes down as we get older.

As of 2000, there were approximately 35 million Americans over the age of 65. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, by 2030 there will be approximately 71.5 million Americans over the age of 65. That number is more than twice what it was in 2000 and represents nearly 20% of the entire projected U.S. population in 2030.

What does it mean to my family?

Issues that families will continue to have to deal with include home remodeling (accessibility, universal design), support issues (finding more time for themselves, balancing work and family responsibilities of caregiving, and managing emotional and physical stress), answers to common problems (home remodeling ideas, etc.)

Aging-In-Place is a choice: Deciding you wish to age in place means you are choosing:

- How you want to spend your retirement years
- How you want your home to be set up
- Which types of assistance are right for you

An Aging-In-Place Plan is Not for 'Old' People

Regardless of whether you have retired or not, it's for you, right now. If you haven't retired yet, it means you have time to think about your needs, research your options and put together a plan that is good for you and your family. If you have retired, putting the time in to building a plan will help keep you in control of your life. For those caring for an elderly parent or loved one, it's for you, too. You can be the most help by working with them to ensure their needs are met. It also will help you provide the level of care that is right for them.
